

To a steady pace last month has witnessed the expansion of the CECRI's research activities and international events commentaries into the media. One will greet the selection by the FNRS of the third phase of an important research project initiated by Michèle Schmiegelow. «Institutional Competition between Common Law and Civil Law in Developing and Transforming Countries» is an interdisciplinary project jointly supported by the CECRI, the CRIDES and the IRES since 2008. Under its title «Legal Development Theory», it aims at demonstrating, through a dynamic macroeconomic analysis, the effects of the development of legal institutions on economic growth since the 19th century.
